Dedication to Our Director

● School is one play in which we all participate; and, as all actors, we, too, owe a debt of gratitude to the director. For this reason, taking pride in our long association with him, we dedicate this Yearbook to our adviser, Mr. Benjamin Epstein. His devoted guidance is deeply appreciated by all of us, and we are glad to have known such a fine teacher and friend.

Message to Class of June 1944

● Now the rehearsal is over, and the play is beginning—one different in many respects, I fear, from the drama so entertainingly depicted in the pages that follow. I wish you God-speed in your new roles. I hope they'll be important ones, and that you'll never fluff your lines.

High Debt Of Gratitude

● We, the Class of June '44, owe much to our homeroom teachers, the assistant directors who have coached us untiringly in the minute details so necessary to the successful portrayal of our everyday roles. They have groomed us admirably for the parts we are now to assume in life.

Prologue

● "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players," players in countless one-act plays, each of which is seemingly insignificant, but really is a vital cog in the repertoire of life. The themes are, unfortunately, tragic in tone, for at this moment the buskin far overshadows the sock; there is too little comedy to relieve the stern oppression. When will Malvolio be freed from his dungeon? That time, though indefinite, can only be hastened by the concerted effort of the Thespians. The success or failure of the actors depends upon the success or failure of their plays. However, cooperation must be the keynote; no one can steal the show and carry off all the laurels. Although there are many actors, all are leading men and women, each a jewel performing on a star-studded stage. The Divine Critic sets a high criterion. Each performance must be a masterpiece; there is no room for amateurs. All must work zealously, sacrifice much, for there are no stand-ins available. We are now experienced troupers; all have played their one-night stands, been on the road, run through the hick-circuit, and are now approaching the big time. With our names in lights and the world as our audience, we shall soon hear the acclaim. The moment of the big show has finally arrived, and each must be prepared to take his place.

The "High" Seas

● Seven of our male stars have left our cast to take parts in the history-making show now being produced in all the theatres of the world. Their parts may seem insignificant when singled out, but the supporting roles they play are the backbone and assurance of success. We proudly present THE NAVY:

ARTHUR B. SCHWARTZ

81 Seymour Ave.

"Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's Thy God's, and truths!"

DONALD BEARISON

56 Goodwin Ave.

*"A man of sovereign parts he is esteemed
Well fitted in the arts, glorious in arms."*

Happy the man who hears and will obey."*

MILTON SPERBER

*"This is the happy warrior; this is he
That every man in arms should wish to be."*

SEYMOUR ASARNOW

84 Hobson St.

*"No coward soul is mine,
No troubler in the world's storm-troubled sphere."*

THOMAS WALTERS

96 Osborne Ter.

*"Oh, through thy prowess and victorious arms,
Thy country may be free from foreign harms."*

BERNARD FINKLESTEIN

310 Johnson Ave.

*"Be firm! one constant element in luck
Is genuine, solid, old Titanic pluck."*

Who's Who

● The highest achievement on the stage is to have one's name in lights, to be the star of the play. So in sports we have a highest honor, that is, to be a member of a varsity team, to wear a varsity "W."

The class of June, '44 presents the stars of its athletic productions, the varsity graduates of Weequahic's five varsity teams: football, baseball, track, and cross-country.

No one will ever forget the terrific football game played by our underdog team, against undefeated, untied, Hillside on Thanksgiving Day, 1943, in which Hillside barely defeated us 13-12 in one of 1943's most exciting games. Our boys were glorious, even in defeat.

The memory of our highly successful basketball teams of the past four years will be placed indelibly in the minds of all our classmates, as will our track and cross-country teams, the school's most consistent winners, and our hard playing baseball team which upheld the name of our school in the highest manner. All these teams were manned heavily by members of the class of June 1944. And now for a close-up of our stars.

Individual Stars

● Howard Bernstein was a star at the guard position. His play was as smart on the field as his work was in Chemistry. Howy deserves special mention for his fine spirit throughout the season.

Ben Bernhardt, hurdler and captain of the track squad, tall and wiry, piled up a tremendous number of points to aid the track team.

Harris Ascher, the lover in sheep's clothing, was the captain of our cross-country team. He was long-winded, fast, and very modest for one of his ability.

Jack Feins was tall and lean. He was the leading backboard retriever and also a high scoring forward of the All-City team and All-State Fives.

Leonard Kleinhandler was a fine ball-handler and playmaker, whose sauntering walk belied his speed and aggressive spirit.

Frank Tevelow was a boy who could run like a deer, and who matched the deer in shyness. His play at the tailback slot was magnificent to watch because of his drive and speed.

Joe Fischman was manager of the baseball team and considered by teammates as efficient a manager as they ever played with.

Albert Green, the slugger of the diamond squad and leading home run hitter, is as unassuming off the field as he is on.

Seymour Kamm was to be seen leading the line charge in his guard position on the eleven. Bull-necked and broad-shouldered, he would make a valuable addition to any team.

Bernard Lauer, co-captain of our nine and a mainstay of our court squad, was one of the school's nicest fellows and better athletes.

Norman Libman, fleet of foot and quick of wit, was the diamond squad's third sacker.

Gene Rissmeyer, co-captain of our baseball squad and quarterback on the football squad, was always the brains of the team.

Dave Furst certainly held up his end of the line. His fast drive kept the opposition from making long gains.

Allen Abrams has received deserved honors in three sports: as distance runner in track and cross-country, and as fullback on our football squad.

Roy Bernstein was an outstanding center on our eleven. His aggressive play stopped many an enemy line plunge. He is affectionately known as "Baby" by intimates.

in the Cast

● The Girls, too, have the opportunity of obtaining the coveted letter "W." Badminton, basketball, archery, and modern dancing are among the many extracurricular activities to choose from. Five points are given every time one of these sports is attended. One hundred points are received for earning an "A" for the term mark, and seventy-five points for a "B." Head Captains are awarded seventy-five points and line captains fifty points. A clear record and one of perfect attendance warrants fifty points.

As soon as a girl receives a thousand points she qualifies for a "W." Fifteen hundred points guarantee the highest gym award, a pin. Some of the girls from the class of June 1944 fortunate enough to win this award are:

Bernice Bierenbaum
Phyllis Furst
Hedda Gerber
Irma Gerber
Beverly Grossman

Jean Hirsh
Jean Hoffman
Bernice Schwankert
Doris Solondz
Sylvia Warshawsky

Harriet Zapsky

● No matter how good the play is, it is the applause of the spectators that decides if it is to be a hit or not. In athletics we have a similar comparison, the cheers of the crowd are music to the athletes' ears. Leading the band on to the field, and leading the crowd in cheers for our teams, were Weequahic's four outstanding cheer leaders. They were Captain Ronald Cohen, Lita Pasteelnick, Beverly Spitalnick, and Kenneth Coleman.

Honor

Society

● One of the most outstanding scenes in our play is the bi-monthly Monday meeting of the Honor Society. Here, under the direction of Mrs. Lorna Furst, some of the leading actors and actresses gather to make plans for the days ahead.

As we come upon the scene, we hear President Irving Ackerman call the meeting to order. Recording Secretary Doris Solondz reads the minutes of the previous meeting. Attendance Secretary Aida Ben-Asher checks to see who is absent and why.

The president calls for committee reports and Arthur Berlin, chairman of the Town Hall of Weequahic Committee, is the first to speak. Then Norton Kolomeyer, chairman of the committee to welcome new students, gives his report.

At this point in the meeting, the door to the upper right flings open and Irwin Perr, late as usual, comes barging in.

Rubin Savitz, the vice-president, has a word to say about tutoring. Bernard Landau, the originator of the present system, finds some point in the execution of the plan that doesn't agree with the rules. This is the signal for a heated debate, in which silver-tongued Muriel Lechter and Leonard J. Cohen of the rapier-wit, take an active part. Before the meeting can again be brought to order, Muriel Fox and Rita Goldberg also take a hand in the discussion. At last, the group is restored to order and the meeting may proceed according to schedule.

In the next assembly, Bernice Siegel and Natalie Rosen are to be the color guard while Seymour Jacowitz acts as flag-bearer.

The Gerber twins, Hedda and Irma, bring up the matter of the theatre party. Alice Berman violently nods her assent to having this problem discussed. Ethel Neupauer and Deborah Nathanson both are anxious to know what progress has been made in obtaining tickets for the selected show. During the entire proceedings, Norbert Goldstein and Robert Stern listen to this women's prattle with a very bored look on their faces. Ellen Diamant, speaking for the busy secretary, informs the players that they won't be able to obtain the tickets they wanted for the date they wanted. The outraged cry from John Weichert and Seymour Drill is quickly squelched by a scathing look from the president.

We glance at the clock, and to our intense surprise, discover that it is 3:30. Apparently Audrey Friedman has also noticed this for she makes a motion that the meeting be adjourned. The motion is seconded by Gertrude Vogel and unanimously approved by the remainder of the cast, and so the curtain descends upon the Brain Trust of Weequahic.

The High on the Hill

Introduction ● The action of the play begins in a soldier's canteen, somewhere in Europe. It is Christmas Eve. There are evidences of revelry just passed. Cigarettes still burn in crowded ash trays, gay paper hats are strewn around the room, and confetti, streamers, candy, gift wrappings, and other party paraphernalia are lying about carelessly. In the giant fireplace, the last dying embers of a roaring, hearty fire also show signs of things gone by. Some of the officers are already in conference, wisely not allowing themselves to be too stimulated by the vertigo of Christmas Eve and the new peace. The fighting has ceased in deference to a greater, more powerful and important Personage. Yes, the war is over. But there is still much work to be done; damaged lives to repair, broken homes to rebuild, and a new dawn of civilization to be realized by just such young former Weequahic students as Janie Everygirl and Johnny Allboys represent. Most of the nurses and men have retired, but as at all parties, there remain those sentimental few who, for various reasons, linger on. Some talk, some remember . . . others dream.

Act One- ● Our interest is immediately drawn to those in the last category; for, very soon after the curtain rises, we notice that one of the nurses and a young officer seem to have something in common. They are sweethearts from high school days—Weequahic school days, in fact. They draw up close to the fire, and we hear Janie say:

Scene 1

"What are you thinking about?"

"Oh, hundreds of things" . . . and he begins toying with the ring on her finger. "Remember when I gave you this? It seems like ages ago, and yet it isn't more than a year and a half ago since prom night. . . . Boy, what I wouldn't give to be in one of the English classes now, or even the study hall. . . . Funny how those four years flew by, and here we are, in the middle of nowhere, with all that behind us."

"Why, I remember as clearly as though it were yesterday when I first began at the Annex. You were still a little suspicious of what you called 'dames' and couldn't talk much when I was around. I believe you were actually scared." . . . "What! Me scared? I should say not! I just wasn't interested, that's all." . . . "Is that why you sent me twelve valentines, all signed with question marks?" . . . "Then you knew!" . . . "Of course I did, silly. And remember the time you were called down to Mr. Coleman's office; and I thought it was something you had done, when all along it was just your mother who had brought your rubbers to school because you had purposely forgotten them . . . gee, but you were embarrassed when you came back to that class. You walked to your seat with the rubbers in your hands and tried to act casual." But, by this time, Johnny's head had fallen gently on her shoulder; and, as she talks on, not realizing that he has fallen asleep, she, too, slowly drifts away into another world. A world, which, though only recently their own, is thousands of miles away and made still farther in the light of the experiences which both have undergone in such a brief span of time. They have seen life and death. They have learned to face the world and still have not forgotten how to laugh. They are no longer immature adolescents. In a way though, the war has been good to them, in the only way a war can be good; for they now have a happy combination of romanticism and realism. Since school days there has been neither time nor place for younger whimsies or memories. But yes, now there is a place . . . there will always be a place for those memories . . . and these two young people have theirs . . . in our dreams, when nature takes over and softly carries us back over the years, we remember. Yes, each dreams differently, yet all are alike. As the curtain falls, on this first scene of Act One, a contented smile covers their faces, as if some unknown hand had placed it there.

As the curtain rises, we can still see Janie and Johnny in the foreground of the stage, where they remain for the rest of the play; but the scene is changed. It is the last day of school at the Annex. . . . We are in one of the homerooms. . . . Pupils are milling about, talking, laughing . . . everyone is dressed in his best. . . . As the teacher enters the room, there is a hushed silence. . . . "and I hope that you will all have a wonderful vacation and will come back in the fall, eager and ready to tackle the new and important jobs which lie ahead of you . . . and don't forget to come back and visit me . . . we don't like to lose contact." . . . That last wonderful day when the world seemed theirs. They had conquered Junior High School and the Annex and were the upper-classmen. They held the esteem if not the reverence of the entire student body . . . and now it was all over . . . no more cramming for exams. What did I say? Well, not for the whole summer anyhow. They had danced the night before at the Class Hop till even the orchestra had tired. The teacher, however, was in fine health, it would seem; and ironic remarks from the more bedraggled of the group ran something like: "She never looks tired . . . always ready, always efficient" . . . and then they bit their tongues, realizing that it was the last day of school; and they were, despite their headaches, (which were, after all, not her fault) very much attached to her. So, feeling very sad and very sentimental, both teacher and class called it a term . . . "Have a nice vacation." "Don't forget to write me, Ruthie." "Thank you. I'm very much pleased." "Sign my dance program, Miss ——" "Don't forget, kids, eight thirty sharp. Whole class is invited." "Goodbye" . . . "Goodbye."

Summer . . . baseball . . . swimming, seashore . . . girls . . . boys . . . dancing working . . . "Homework? Never heard of it." Johnny turns over in his sleep . . . whirr . . . buzz . . . whirrr rrr. . . .

Act Three— ● Both Janie and Johnny have been quite restless because its . . . SEPTEMBER!!!

Scene 1

The scene is home room. Many of the girls look the same . . . others have CHANGED . . . some are wearing high heels and lipstick . . . new hairstyles . . . but the boys are still "The Boys." They huddle in the corners boasting of the beauty of the girls they chased all summer. . . . "Look at that streak in her hair," "Sun, my foot." "You may have your milk in a saucer tonight, dear." "I learned to do a back flip at camp this summer." . . . Recitation slips . . . organization cards . . . "Good-morning. Our classes can be interesting, entertaining, and I give everyone a fair break. . . . You meet me half way and I'll—Didn't I have your sister two terms ago? . . . Oh, no relation, huh? Relax. You won't be compelled to keep a notebook." . . . Lunch room . . . noise . . . cash-register bell . . . trays . . . brown paper bags . . . crash!! . . . broken bottle . . . HOO-RAY! (Applause) . . . "And I hope everyone has a lovely vaca— "Please, teacher, we know, we know," . . . Johnny murmurs in his sleep . . . "And, of course you all realize that next year is the most important year in your school career. Goodbye . . ." Class is dismissed and Johnny walks over to Janie. They are "Steadies" now and both worldly sophisticates, having had the pleasure of ribbing three newly arrived 2B classes since their own. Johnny is nattily dressed in a sport's jacket and bow tie, having caught on to the prevalent "collegiate" styles and Janie is also "hep" with the perennial sweater, skirt, and saddles.

"In another year I'll be in the service, and you'll be who knows where." "Don't talk like that, silly. A year is ages off . . . Lots of things can happen. The war will probably be over by then. Yes, that's it!"

Epilogue

● Twenty-five years ago in June 1944, the curtain went down upon "The High on the Hill" after a run of four successful years. The show was a fine production in which each actor played his part well. Although the characters had acted their roles with the Weequahic Players for the last time, they went on to new and better roles in the greatest show of all—Life. At that time, we did not know what these roles were to be, who was to be cast as the great scientist, the successful career woman, the efficient businessman, the skillful physician, or the good homemaker, or where these roles were to be played.

After that graduation night in June 1944, each member of the class went his own way. Most of the boys went into the armed services while the girls either continued their education or began their business careers. A majority of the graduates returned to Newark after the war; but some, like ourselves, did not.

As we return today in June 1969, for our first visit to Newark in twenty-five years, what sights greet us? What do we see when we visit the old places we knew so well? Whom do we meet? Where do we meet these people? These questions are the ones over which we pondered twenty-five years ago when we were writing the Class Prophecy—the questions to which we did not know the answers. The chief difference between then and now is that we are today able to go our way about Newark and see each of these questions answered by the cast of "The High on the Hill" themselves, acting their permanent roles in Life.

Walking down Broad Street for the first time in twenty-five years, we see many new sights. One of these, a showplace of Newark, is the new, ultra-modern Greenberg-Reichenstein Department Store, a massive building rising fifteen stories in the air and covering a square block. Upon entering it, we notice behind the counters such star saleswomen as Elayne Ackerman, Gloria Allan, Pauline Ostrowsky, Natalie Kammerman, Florence Anzano, Pauline Butofsky, Muriel Mittleman, Ruth Ebel, Betty Feldman, Teresa Murphy, Jean Hoffman, and Helen Hratko. On our way to the executive offices to see our old friends, President Allen Greenberg of the firm and General Manager Marvin Reichenstein, we pass a door on which is the sign, "Herbert Sirkin, Advertising Manager." In the president's office, his secretary, Jacqueline Kempler, greets us. As we are talking with Allen, his corporation lawyer, Edward Wasserson, calls to see him on some very important business; and, after a short time, we take leave of Al and continue on our way about Newark.

Near this new store rises the fifty-story skyscraper which is the home of the Drill National Bank, headed by Seymour Drill. As we go in to see Sy, we are attracted by Clarence Hamer, Herbert Lart, Evans Herman, Bernard Landy, Abe Geier, Cyril Leder, and Sidney Meyers, behind teller's cages. In the bank are also seen Wilbur Feldman, Howie Teitelbaum, Aaron Cohen, Harry Stein, Abe Maisano, Mark Haskell, John Faughman, and Marvin Narden, all cashing checks. When we arrive at Sy's office, his secretary, Frances Goldfarb, tells us he is at a bankers' convention with his assistants, Irving Klein, Benson Levine, and Marvin Menkes. Disappointed at missing Sy, we wander out into the lobby of the Bank Building.

There we find the directory of people who maintain offices in the building; and, scanning it, we see listed the names of the firms of Brietkopf and Coelln, Accountants, and of the Frank Holland Insurance Agency. Also listed on the directory are lawyers Arthur Brody, Dan Gallop, Ed Hank, Ira Gurney, Ed McCormick, and Ed Boland. Wishing to see our former class President, Ed, we go up to his office where his secretary, Ruth Eberle, tells us we can find him at the City Hall where he is serving as Mayor. As we leave the elevator, we meet artist Bob Campbell, who has his studio in the building, together with models Betty Bernstein, Helen Chinich, and Audrey Lighter.

As we are walking toward the City Hall, our gaze is attracted by many new signs over the stores. One which stands out reads, "Seymour Lenter & Co., 'Modern Cut Clothes'"; another, "Kleinberg, Cohen, and Wollman, Interior Decorators"; and a third, "Dyckman and Curtis, Gowns."

After we arrive at the City Hall, we meet Deputy Mayor Murray Kivitz, "Boss" of the Third Ward. Upon approaching the mayor's office, we see many people whom we know including City Engineer William Ostroff, Board of Education Members Maidie Heimberg and Marilyn Windmuller, and, pounding the City Hall beat, reporter Victor Rittenband.

Through some of the glass doors which still abound in the City Hall, we are able to see clerks Doris Thompson, Ann Volpe, Martha Schmidt, Theresa Healy, Charlotte Litman, Ruth Shafman, Shirley Remer, Beatrice Mohns, Anna Peters, Shirley Harrison, Carole Levine, and Mildred Mason. We also meet Sheriff Stanley Camche and his assistant, James Kaiser.

In the Mayor's office, his secretary, Claire Heilenday, tells us that he is just completing a broadcast about the City Hall he has planned to build in Newark. She, in talking about the project, assures us that absolutely no graft is involved. Soon after that, the door to His Honor's office opens, and out step reporters Edith Davidson and Shirley Gohd and photographer Martin Fishbein. Claire tells us we may enter the Mayor's office; and, once inside, we see radio engineers Richard Platoff, Ramon Gold, Eugene Grossman, and Gilbert Linn dismantling their sound equipment, aided by technicians Richard Denning and Sidney Fisch. After hearing from Ed about how Newark has changed, we are interrupted by Chief of Police Joseph Fishman and Safety Engineer Wm. Klueber who have come to discuss a new safety drive with the Mayor; and we leave Ed to continue browsing about Broad Street.

Once outside again, we walk toward the Medical Tower, wondering which members of our Class have become physicians. Near the Tower, we meet the first of these, Leonard J. Cohen, carrying his medical bag and entering his limousine. In the lobby, we meet Doctors Sol Mix, Sanford Billet, Seymour Betman, Samuel Penn, and William Maxwell. They tell us that Doctors Herb Korey, Norton Kolomeyer, William Goldstein, Richard Greene, and Dentist Sid Rubin also have their offices in the Tower, while Dr. Irving Ackerman is to be found in the Beth Israel Hospital of which he is now head.

Looking into the Tower's luncheonette, we see nurses Margaret Doyle, Esther Siegel, Gladys Weiss, and Ethel Neupauer being served by soda jerker Mary Spinola. Also in the luncheonette are Dolores Metzger, Dorothea Fishman, Lucy Livecchi, and medical technicians Marion Ash and Barbara Bird, who work in the Tower.

As we cross to Lincoln Park, we buy a newspaper; and, while sitting on a bench in the park, we browse through it. As we sit there, we notice gardeners Walter Pivnick and George Panayote working about a bed of tulip bulbs in the park. On the front page of the paper, there is a story by Washington reporter Judith Horowitz about an important case tried in the Supreme Court of which Doris Solondz and Seymour Jacowitz are now members.

On the sports page are articles by Seymour Kamm and Roy Frankel about preparations for the American participation in the coming Olympic Games to be held in the Lisker Stadium in Moscow, so named in honor of the great, pro-Russian American writer, Lester Lisker. The article states that the track section of the Olympic team will be coached by Allen Abrams, assisted by Harris Ascher, and Leonard Schless; the swimming team by Roy Bernstein; the basketball team by Jack Feins. Aiding the coaches are to be trainers Gene Rissmeyer, Lenny Kleinhandler, Bernard Lauer, Mickey Denholtz, Dave Furst, and Dave Yurow. In charge of the entire group will be Frank Tevelow. Other articles on the page are by Ben Bernhardt and are about Albert Green's new contract to manage the New York Yankees and Kenneth Coleman's plans for how to better his own world ski jump record next winter.

On the amusement page, we find a review of the new Broadway musical, "Highlights of 1969," produced and directed by Manny Levine, assisted by John Weichert. Starred in the new musical are Ronnie Cohen, Comedian Charlie Lubetkin, Lorraine Beerman, Lynn Berman, and Howard Bernstein. Also listed as being in the cast of the new hit are comedians Marvin Greenspan and Dave Fertig, and chorus girls Lorraine Wosnitzer, Lita Pastellnick, Dorothy Kaminsky, Nan Rosenthal, Rhea Cohen, Beverly Spitalnick, and Helen Seelenfreund. The review praises the music, saying, "An outstanding Feldman-Speizer score, magnificently played by the Barry Lazarus band, featuring Al Taback, Morton Nurkin, Harold Klarfeld, and Bill Blumenau." According to the review, the show's beautiful costumes are the creations of fashion designers Janet Brell and Aida Ben-Asher.

Also found on the amusement page are Gloria Glass' reviews of a violin recital given by Estelle Krupnick, and of another fine Carnegie Hall concert by soprano Lucille Block, who was accompanied by Beverly Grossman.

Among the letters to the editor are those from Missionary Doris Bond who is in India and writes about conditions there, from Senator Martin Freedman, the first Communist Senator in the nation, who writes about proposed new labor legislation, and social workers Florence Goldsman, Elaine Botwinsky, and Jean Price, who write about the proposed new slum clearance project.

By chance we turn to the Society page and notice an article by Sallie Weiss which states that among the many guests at a benefit party given by Peggy Bochner were Sylvia Warshawsky, Phyllis Furst, Anne Chase, Shirley Block, Gilda Offen, Natalie Rosen, Elaine Goldsmith, Elaine Jacobson, Phoebe Engel, Shola Stone, Doris Kaplan, Charlotte Berkelhammer, Esther Gross, Myrl Finkel, Joan Klauber, and Iris Horowitz.

As it is now growing late, from all sides come workers rushing to board trains of the new Newark subway, built by the construction firm of Landau, Marum, and Perr, Inc. Among those whom we notice in the crowds leaving one large office building and hurrying into the subway are Secretaries Florence Kaiser, Carolyn Herman, May Brown, Blanche Kaplan, Phyllis Hirsh, Helen Hull, Jean Hirsh, Rhoda Frawert, Joyce Citron, Bernice Bierenbaum, Shirley Burnstein, Florence Bader, Rita Bertolo, and Bernice Bettel.

En route to a restaurant for dinner, we pass Anna Angerame, Felice Ruddy, James Kaiser, Florence Axman, Norman Sanders, Seymour Lieberman, and Harriet Simon, leaving work late. As we enter the restaurant, we notice proprietors Nick Sblendorio and Arnold Greenfield talking to a party containing Shirley Loeffler, Arline Max, Marion Kleinhandler, Ann Kother, Theresa Krautheim, and Ruth Intrator. Working as waitresses are found Thelma Goldie, Gladys Gordon, Ruth Levin, Gladys Gottfried, Frances McGee, and Josephine Zapulla; and, behind the bar, is bartender Jerry Szanger. During dinner, we notice Marilyn Alter, Christina Grant, Helen Baker, Virginia Whiteley, Gloria Kessler, Sylvia Weisman, Jean Pollack, Annette Tucker, Elizabeth Vicik, and Robert Becker, also dining.

After finishing our dinner, we decide to visit Weequahic at night and hail a cab to take us to the school. As one pulls up, we see it is a new streamlined model designed by the famous automotive engineers, Robert Stern and Alan Rosenberg. We tell the driver, Norman Libman, our destination and, at the same time, notice he has an unusually happy look on his face. Curious, we ask him why he is so pleased, and he tells us that his last "fare" was the famous gambler and booker, "Lucky" Bobby Ross, and that he has just received a twenty dollar tip from him.

When we arrive at Weequahic, we find the school ablaze with lights. On impulse we decide to enter the building and find out why it is open. In the auditorium, we find Principal Arthur Berlin introducing the speaker of the evening, Authoress Muriel Fox, to a Parent-Teacher Association meeting. In the audience we observe parents Gloria Bendet, Phyllis Fine, Lois Izenberg, Audrey Friedman, Iris Wild, Gloria Bean, Ruth Weisman, Irene Milman, Ada Baum, Mildred Ackerman, Helen Farkas, Stanley Shevitz, Marvin Wood, Marvin Fromkin, John Wise, Martin Blumenfeld, and James Gardner. Also in the audience are teachers Rita Goldberg, Gertrude Vogel, Alice Berman, Muriel Blumberg, Richard Birn, Bernice Siegel, Deborah Nathanson, Mary Agliozzo, and Ruth Levine.

After the meeting, we leave the building and are attracted to the old Chancellor Avenue football practice field where a circus is setting up. In charge we find roustabout Nathan Zvaifler. Helping him set up the Big Top are Joe Tessler, Robert Pletzner, and goldbrick Norman Ochs, working harder than anyone else—giving orders. In charge of the animals is the circus veterinarian, Bob Kaufman, who, at the moment, is managing the elephants in their work of raising the Big Top. Sitting in the living tents are bareback riders Sylvia Monas, Marie Pavone, Madeline Moreines, and star Betty Rubenstein. The ticket sellers, Elaine Wildstein, Elaine Schipero, Verz Zazulia, LaVanche Walker, and Clara Senick are listening to barkers Saul Weiss and Sid Shane who are, as usual, engaged in a violent debate.

Outside once again, we see Clayre Schwartz and Marvin Rosen, co-owners of the circus talking with strongman William Ortz. Looking at our watches, we realize how late it is and return to our hotel, Hotel Hospitality.

There we see at the desk our hostesses, the owners of Hotel Hospitality, the charming Gerber Sisters, Hedda and Irma, talking to night clerk Hugo Weisenbacher and guests Bert Schwartz, Eugene Tendler, and Morton Schwartz, whom we join for a short time before retiring.

Early the next morning, we visit Port Newark, the industrial heart of the city. Among the new plants which we observe are the massive Savitz Aeronautical Works where the Savitz Rocket Ship, capable of speeds up to one thousand miles per hour is made, and the Goldstein Machine and Tool Company. We decide to visit both of these plants; and, first, we enter that of the Savitz Concern. In the offices, we see clerks Harriet Zapolsky, Elaine Weinberg, Claire Stavitsky, Selma Horner, Bernice Ornstein, Shirley Rothstein, Esther Levine, Emilie Pogranieczny, Harriet Portnow, and Mary Kasak, busily going about their duties. In the main office, we meet Business Manager Sanford Gelwarg who calls his secretary, Denise Meimin, to take us to the engineering department to see owner Rubin Savitz. There we meet Chief Engineer Walter Peretz and his assistants, Walter Fleck, Jerry Rabinowitz, Leonard Hollander, and Meyer London, going over plans for a new model rocket plane with their chief. The new craft, we are told, is to be made of a new super-strong, lightweight alloy developed by chemists Rita Frucht and Muriel Lechter.

After a little time in the engineering department, Rubin takes us on a tour of the plant. Working at various jobs are Shirley Halprin, Lillian Goodman, and Mary Fischer. At last, we reach the assembly and inspection department where the parts for the giant ships are inspected and assembled. Inspecting parts are Anna Finberg, Charles Linkov, Martin Sternback, Amelia Ozimek, Joyce Colmeraueur, Ritta Epstein, and Claire Fein. Rita Feldman, Shirley Lippy, Helen Mergner, Gertrude Kaplan, John Tursky, Malvin Wasserman, and Fred Pfirman are seen doing assembly work.

After completing the tour, we go to the Goldstein Tool plant, owned by engineer Norbert Goldstein. In the offices, we find bookkeeper Nathan Regenstreich and clerks Evelyn Sadowski, Ruth Levin, Mildred Rudnick, Selma Schenerman, Dorothy Shapiro, and Lillian Sinclair. Secretary Bernice Schwankert takes us in to see Norb; and he tells us that engineer Martin Schwarz is plant manager. He also tells us that among the other employees in the plant are many we know including expeditor Moe Schlanger, draftsman Leo Sheiner, salesmen Sam Slomowitz, Irwin Krutman, Meyer Traberman, and Leonard Castlebaum, and cost accountant Norm Zegas. Norb then offers to drive us back to our hotel as he has an appointment downtown.

We accept his invitation; and, returning to our hotel, we see in a meeting room off the lobby, Elaine Goldstein, Phyllis Feldblum, Lola Lee Warner, Henrietta Fink, Beryl Gold, Elaine Fredericks, Lillian Poliakowsky, Blanche Poll, Katherine Werthman, Phyllis Goldner, Claire Ziegler, Elayne Wechsler, and Lynette Liebow at a meeting of the Newark Women's Club, listening to their president, Ellen Diamant.

Calling at the desk for our key, we see traveling salesmen Jack Schlein, Irving Rosen, Albert Sine, and Sid Stein checking in, assisted by clerk Muriel Rubin. In the elevator, we meet our fellow guests, Edith Beckerman, Phyllis Herman, Marie Jacko, and Evelyn Kaplan. Once in our rooms again, we begin to pack, for our visit to Newark is nearing its end.

Soon we are checking out and say our last goodbyes to our hostesses, Hedda and Irma Gerber, and all our friends at the Hotel Hospitality and take a taxi to the Pennsylvania Railroad Station. After buying our tickets from Marjorie Morgenstern, we go to the waiting room to await the arrival of our train. In the station we see Mildred Neels, Harriet Kesselhaut, Beverly Rubin, Evelyn Robinson, Shirley Pill, Rosalyn Lauber, Frances Lazaroff and Lenore Nelkin. Finally our train is called; and, as we rush to board it, we watch Edith Diamond, Helga Kaufer, and Natalie Katz leaving the train, returning to their homes in Newark just as we are leaving the city.

Finally settled in our comfortable chairs on the train, we relax and reflect over what we have seen during our whirlwind tour of Newark. We have seen the members of the cast of "The High on the Hill" acting their permanent roles, some playing parts similar to those they took in that old production, others portraying characters far different from any which we had, even in our wildest dreams, ever cast them for. We have learned how far the Prophecy over which we labored so long and so hard twenty-five years ago was from being correct. Yet, as we think back over our days at Weequahic, we easily see and gratefully realize how well those first parts in the now almost forgotten "High" really helped to prepare us for those we play in Life.

Now he's six feet under ground.*

Senior Homeroom

● Every morning at 8:29 an insignificant figure rushes in through the doorway of a homeroom, unnoticed. This character then proceeds to her seat, still out of breath and picking up falling books, notebooks, and pencils. The final bell rings, and the reading of the Bible follows. After this the clamor is resumed, and about us we see many things that would be considered peculiar by most people. On our left, we see someone fervently copying homework, to the right, a girl inspecting her latest love letter; we watch people rushing about collecting money, teacher trying to read the notices while giving out cut slips, someone campaigning for O.B.A., and still another person asking in an expectant voice, "Is there an assembly today?" By this time the bell is about to ring, signifying the passing of classes; "Oh there it goes." Thus ends a typical morning in the home room; and, as we file out to our first period class, we appreciate the restful quiet that resounds through our Weequahic halls in contrast to our homeroom. However, we love it, and wouldn't trade it for all the hall passes in the school.

Lunchroom Antics

● You must have eaten in our lunchroom at one time or other. If you haven't, brother, you haven't lived! Of course, one must realize that participating in the mass mastication that goes on is one of the most enjoyable sensations that can be experienced. The entire process begins somewhat in this fashion:

You sit in your classroom waiting those agonizing few minutes for the bell to ring. At last, it does ring; and joy lends wings to your feet as you gaily sail out the door, keeping a mental check on your score of collisions and figuring out whether or not you have topped yesterday's record. You perform a double swan dive down an up stairway, avoiding Miss Gerber's glare, and come to a skidding stop in front of your locker. Now you proceed to twiddle the combination, but slip each time because your hands are sweating and you are trying to balance your books on one knee, one arm, and a chin. You bang on your locker, kick it twice for good measure, and magically, the door opens. Slamming your books in, you grab your lunch and the report that has to be handed in completed by next period, and carom up the stairway, usually zigging where you should have zagged.

You dash for your favorite table and tilt six to twenty chairs against it as visible proof that you have taken possession in the name of tender gastronomy and stand around for a moment to await results. Action is not long delayed; and the next breathless student usually manages to trip over the legs of half the chairs, upsetting both your table and the one behind it. Satisfied with the successful snaring of your victim, you leave him to entricate himself and rearrange the chairs for the next unfortunate. Now a period of life and death bartering for milk, sandwiches, food plates, candy, ice cream and, "What we ain't got, you ain't gettin'!" follows. Flushed with victory and squashed sandwiches, you return to your table and join the lively throng that have taken their customary seats with such running comment as, "Did you see the test Blank gave us? I swear I had them all right. The only trouble was—"

By the time such discussions are over, you have finished your lunch and are starting in on the report you have to complete listening with one ear to, "I hate that guy, Sinatra," and with the other to, "Now you take the root mean square of the sine curve and—" Sure enough, just when you are finishing the report that you know you should get an "A" on because you copied it straight from the book, some girl comes along and generously contributes half her frostick to your composition. You assure her that she is very thoughtful, but that the teacher can not see the words through a quarter-inch of ice cream and chocolate. You blot the paper as well as you can with a napkin and pray that the teacher won't glance too closely. Pleasant interludes come at times, usually when you are hurrying from the lunchroom to your next period class. These interludes come in the form of falling milk bottles. Don't misunderstand me though. Some of the happiest moments of my life were spent in picking pieces of milk bottle out of my legs.

Dramatis Drosophilae

● As we enter the Biology Lab, we first hear a monotonous droning, gradually increasing in volume. The air grows hazy before us as in a mirage; soon we wish we had brought mosquito netting. The cause of the haze is a swarm of Drosophila Melanogaster, otherwise known as the Mediterranean fruit fly. This common pest is very valuable in the study of genetics, or heredity, as it is capable of producing successive generations within a short time. After learning these absorbing facts from an alert guide, we proceed to go through the motions of a contortionist in an apoplectic fit. Suddenly, we find ourselves becoming drowsy in this arabesque atmosphere; our guide explains that it is only the ether used to render the fruit fly unconscious for counting and selection purposes. We are next confronted with a bottle of squirming, white caterpillars which, we are told, are technically maggots or larvae. Finally, half overcome by swarms of flies, ether, and moldy media bottles, we stumble, gasping, from the Lab. The usual procedure now, our guide tells us, is to go home and take a bath.

A Day at Weequahic

I'll tell you of a school day
At dear Weequahic High,
The students are so nonchalant
They'll get there by and by.

They run into the building,
To their lockers make a dash.
And when the door is opened
Out flies a bunch of trash.

Then to their homerooms noisy
They run around to chat.
We hear of Janie's boyfriend
And Betty Lou's new hat.

The first bell rings and to their class
They hurry down the hall.
Until they hear a teacher say,
"Be careful or you'll fall."

The day speeds by so quickly
They hardly know it's gone.
They hurry from their classes
And homewardbound they run.

Air Raid

Nine bells have rung, and all's not well.
Confusion starts, the teachers yell,
The halls are crowded, the stairways jammed,
Throughout the school doors are slammed.
Lockers are opened, books fly out,
Girls are screaming, fellows shout.
Down the hall they pass in line;
The confusion stops, and all is fine.
A long bell sounds the time to sit;
Here and there we hear some wit.
Songs are sung, all off key,
Ranging from low A to C.

Everyone's sitting comfy at last;
All of a sudden comes a loud blast.
Back to the lockers, throw in the coats;
Sounds in the hall; "Mairzy Doats."

The Air Raid is over, but don't hurry back;
Buy War Bonds! Back the Attack!
(We fooled you didn't we?)

The Ups and Downs of School Life

The stairways were changed in our Junior Year;
The "Ups" became "Downs" and everywhere
Students were moving in all directions
With traffic-cop teachers to make corrections.
It would have been better, it seems to me,
For them to have let the stairways be.

Weequahic Hymn

By the tall school which tops the hill,
Their robes to summer's breeze unfurled,
Here once four hundred students wrought
And then set forth to greet the world.

The way was sternly rude and long,
The road to fame was rough and steep,
But each was armed with purpose strong
And each, we hope, reward will reap.

On this broad hill by life's swift stream
We dedicate a votive tome,
That memory may our deeds redeem
When, like the rest, we too shall roam.

The Price of Liberty

I looked into the paper and read his name;
His age, not yet twenty-four.
I looked at my selfish heart, ashamed
Of the terrible things I saw.

I have just been saying that ten per cent
Is a stiff tax for liberty,
Yet that boy gave his precious life
For a greedy old fool like me.

Oh, flag-draped case you challenge my right
To live in a land so free,
For the bells have tolled for another soul,
For a young lad who died for me.

Pictures

● "Have you seen my proofs? No, I won't show them to you. You can't make me. Well, all right, here they are. No, don't tell me, they're horrible aren't they? No, you really don't think they're good, do you?" This is a typical scene following the acceptance of the graduation proofs.

The day we girls had our pictures taken I heard the latest gossip about who's who and why, saw one of the latest styles in dresses, heard about so-and-so and her new boyfriend, and, all in all, spent a very enjoyable afternoon. The mirror was the main attraction, and each one was sure her pictures would turn out to be the most terrible ones in the class if she didn't have priority.

That Room

● All through the months of February and March, I had heard people speak of that room. "Did you hear what happened in that room?" "Did we have fun in that room, yesterday!" "Was the teacher in that room mad the other day!" I was going mad; where was that room, who worked there, who taught there, and what went on there everyday from 1:50 on? I had to find the answer to these questions soon, or else Graystone would be my next "school."

After interviewing many people, who thought me one of "Growing Pains" advertisements, I finally learned that 302 was the room where these strange sounds were occurring. The very next day during the eighth period I silently peered through the small glass window into that room. It looked quite normal, in fact, all I saw was a teacher sitting at a desk and a girl typing in the corner. Venturing into the room, I quietly asked if I might study there. The teacher looked at the typist and the typist at the teacher and they started to laugh. Oh such a laugh, it sent shivers up my spine, but I was allowed to stay—to study.

I had seated myself in a chair at the back of the room when it happened! What I went through that day was an experience I shall never forget. The door opened, the door closed, it opened, it closed, it opened, it closed, girls and boys came in, service men came in, other people came in, but just as soon left.

The girls and boys, about nine seeming to be the most important, crowded around the teacher who alternately smiled, scolded, and scoffed at what the students thought was so important. Each person in that room seemed so very busy, yet it was so noisy at times I thought I would have to leave or become 4F

Maybe it was I, or the day, or something else; but none of us seemed to think the proofs were good enough. The photographer, of course, tried his best to explain that the camera doesn't lie or that you don't know photography. But whether they were good or not, the thrill of trying on the cap and gown was worth all the disappointment, trouble, and what-not that we went through.

The photographer soon steadied our nerves, and calm, collected girls made their exits from the studio, each one certain that hers were the best.—A little disappointment comes to us all in life; what if some have got their share already?

because of burst ear drums. But I consoled myself with the thought that this must be genius expressing itself in a new way. While this was going on, the teacher talked first to one student, answered a question of one on the other side of the room, corrected the spelling of a paper before her, spoke pleasantly to a couple of service men who were visiting her, and told ambitious students who entered through the door to this "Inner Sanctum" that there was nothing for them to do today, thanks. I marveled as I watched, thinking to myself what a marvelous machine the human body is, for right in front of my eyes is a perfect example of a person doing at least five things at once.

Students kept walking back and forth across that room, hands full of papers and pencils, typewriters going at full blast, conversations being carried on in at least three different groups. I never saw a group of people look so busy. "They must get so much done," I thought. Then the teacher said, "We are getting absolutely nothing done on time." My brain whirled; nothing done, but they look so busy.

At last it was time to leave. I walked, or rather staggered, out of that room, downstairs to my locker and out to the street, "Air, that's what I need, air." Just as I was about to collapse, one of the boys who was in that room came towards me. He looked like a normal individual, so I ventured up to him and, with hushed breath, I asked, "What do they do in that room?"

The answer came in a muffled voice as the boy nervously looked around as if expecting someone to sneak up in back of him and strike him, "In that room we—we're—we're composing THE LEGEND!"

Adventures in a Box-Office

● We opened the door of the little cubicle with fear in our hearts and grins on our faces. Stumbling knee-deep through long-lost ice-cream papers, lunch bags thrown over the walls, pencil stubs, stray pennies, and mislaid sandwiches and apples, we took our places before the not-too-clean window that seemed to have no other purpose than to make hearing impossible. It was because of this window that any social call or extremely complicated business was carried on from the side door. There were signs tacked above and around the window: "Please Have Exact Change," "Student tickets only 28c," "O.B.A. dance this Friday," and "Jonesberg for Student Council." Every few days a new sign would appear, and some of the old notices would vanish—that is, all except the "Exact Change" one. Of all the important notes, this one was the most valuable (and the least obeyed). During every period there would certainly be at least eight people demanding to know when and where the next game was to be played, how much the tickets cost, could tickets be returned, did we have change for a twenty dollar bill, and did Joe crawl past here six minutes ago. There were many types of students who came to us. One species, the rarest of the lot, quietly put a quarter and three copper pennies on the counter, took his ticket and stole away. Far more numerous were those who blithely shoved dollar bills at us just when our mouths were full of sandwiches and the cash box had been short of pennies, nickles, and dimes. Dumbly we pointed to the "Exact Change" sign and prepared to face blistering glares or desperate, pleading looks. Our particular enemies were those people who threw garbage-filled lunch bags over the wall from the next table, smart ones who asked for twelve tickets (and really bought them), and wide-eyed sophomores who walked up, stared at the sign announcing "Central vs. Weequahic—Friday—Tickets on Sale Here," and shyly asked, "Do you sell tickets for Friday's game?"

When the end of the period arrived, we wearily turned the booth over to the next unfortunate and shambled into our next class, ten minutes late, as usual.

Fools Rush In . . .

The portal opened slightly as was timidly disclosed
An unassuming creature with a pert, inquiring nose.
The Babel-like assemblage darkly proved his utmost fears;
The roar of countless howitzers assailed his trembling ears.
He gazed about him balefully, distraught by constant clacking;
No method of producing noise devised by man was lacking.
Stenographers he overlooked, 'twas bigger game he sought,
He prepared himself for sterner fray than Samson ever fought;
His arms were far more deadly than the jawbone of an ass,
A more worthy case of righteous wrath had never come to pass.
Now, heading toward a central desk surrounded by a few
From whose bewrinkled brows the perspiration dripped like dew,
He paused an instant, drew a shining pencil from its sheath,
And sallied forth to meet the foe through papers strewn beneath.
The foe, who were forwarned by shout, of pending tragedy,
Awoke from musing fathoms deep with studied lethargy.
On seeing but a half-crazed youth, they sank in thought again,
But another of the myriad-host aroused by potent pen.
Then, describing a periphery of geometric beauty,
The paladin of righteousness pursued his line of duty;
With choking rage and stifled gasps his story he made plain,
Why had they issued worse to him than that received by Cain?
His picture in the Yearbook had inspired widespread fame,
But why! Oh why, in all this world, had they misspelled his name!

"Good-Bye, my School"

With Apologies to Walt Whitman

Good-bye, my school!
Farewell, dear friend, dear home!
I'm going away, I know not where,
Or to what fortune, or whether I may ever see you again.
So Good-bye my school.
Now for the last, let me look back a moment;
The long, loud clamor of the bell is in me.
But, soon, that too will leave me forever.

Four years, I have worked, studied and played;
Delightful!—now separation—Good-bye, my school.

Yet let me not be too hasty,
For four years you have taught me many of the things I know today;
So as we part, that knowledge still remains within me.
If I continue my education, your teachings will always aid me.
Maybe I have scorned the lessons in class;
Maybe I have disobeyed the rules which are kept within your frame;
Maybe I have misunderstood the reasons for your insistence of those rules—but now I leave.
Good-Bye—and thanks! my school.

All Out for Victory!

In these challenging days, requiring the utmost effort of every one of us to bring a complete victory to our country and a lasting peace to the world, the educational front—like the battle front and the production front—plays a vital role.

The year book today has a new and powerful motif: to reflect the school in war time.

Likewise, the year book today has a richer meaning than ever before: it is engraved with memories of friends and classmates who will be setting forth to all the fronts.

You rightfully expect a year book that will hold a proud place in the annals of your school, and for these reasons we dedicate our trained skills, our modern plant, and our experienced services to the fulfillment of your most discriminating requirements.
